Soldiers' Stories on Our Streets is a community research and learning project enabling local people to find out who lost their lives in the Great War from the streets of Medway.

The project has been inspired by the Friends of Medway Archives (FOMA) and their FOMA De Caville Index. This was initially started by a local man Mick De Caville, who began a quest to record street-by-street the men of Medway

Although well known outside of Medway in research circles, this fantastic resource is under used and little known in Medway itself. The project aims to raise local awareness of the FOMA Index, whilst training local people in basic archive and research skills, to learn more about the First World War through their family, house and area's history.

who had died during the Great War.

The map you see today highlights all the streets in Medway who lost a serviceman during the Great War.
